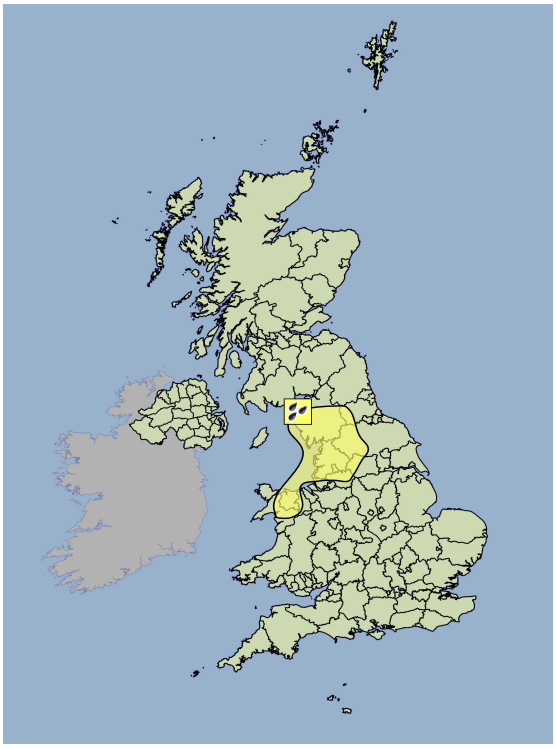
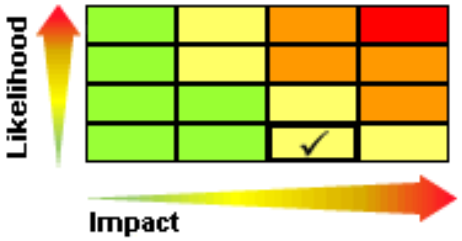
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Two further frontal systems are expected to run eastwards across the country during Monday night and through Tuesday. These will contain very moist tropical air and are likely to lead to further bouts of persistent and, at times, heavy rain. Totals of 20 to 40 mm are possible over the high ground of NW Wales and NW England with peak values of 60 mm over the most exposed sites.

Some uncertainties remain over the northern extent of the higher rainfall amounts, as well as the timings of the more intense spells of rain. The warning will therefore be kept under review but with this rainfall falling onto already saturated ground some significant impacts are possible.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 00:15 on Tue, 17th Nov 2015 until 23:45 on Tue, 17th Nov 2015

Two frontal systems will run across England and Wales on Tuesday from the west bringing further heavy rain, particularly across the hills of northwest England and northwest Wales.

The public should be aware that, given the already saturated conditions, flooding is possible either from standing water or from rivers already swollen by recent rainfall. This could lead to disruption to travel and flooding to properties.

This is a further update to the warning issued on Friday, limiting this warning to Tuesday as well as removing Northumberland and Derbyshire from the warning area.
